Disaster Elsewhere: Send individuals or teams to disaster stricken location, coordinate efforts and work with other trauma response teams on the scene.

Public Education: Outreach to clinical agencies, vulnerable populations, first-responders and others about trauma and treatment.

Local Networking: Outreach to local emergency management organizations and participate with the Emergency Services Network.

Networking: Coordinate with other trauma response teams nationally to share best practices.

EMDR THERAPY AND INTERVENTION FOLLOWING TRAUMATIC EVENTS

- In Newtown/Sandy Hook, FCTRT clinicians provided treatment and training to mental health clinicians, families, teachers, and first responders directly impacted by the shooting.
- To date, EMDR (Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing) has helped millions of people of all ages relieve many types of psychological stress.
- The sooner one receives treatment after a trauma, the better and more quickly one can resume optimal functioning. Prevents future problems with concentration, behavioral and emotional regulation, unexplained physical symptoms, isolation, and excessive guilt.
- Secondary symptoms often develop after a trauma because of high levels of anxiety and uncertainty. Compared to other forms of treatment, -e.g. trauma-focused cognitive behavioral therapy which tend to be very context-specific - EMDR helps to generalize treatment gains to other situations, requires no homework, is thorough, brief, and clients continue to get better beyond the treatment period.
- EMDR is recommended by many professional organizations, i.e. SAMHSA's National Registry of Evidence-based Programs and Practices, Department of Veterans Affairs & Department of Defense, Israeli National Council for Mental Health, the World Health Organization along with many others.
- Research has shown that post-trauma symptoms are significantly reduced with immediate treatment. FCTRT clinicians are trained in emergency early intervention protocols. This helps to build resiliency and can buffer against later development of PTSD symptoms.
